

EXHIBIT "C"

Picture of Flame Thrower

(Not arrested or reprimanded by the police)

News › World › Americas

Charlottesville: Man pictured using homemade flame thrower on white supremacists speaks out

Corey Long fought off 'Nazis who took over my town' after extremists turned violent against peaceful protest

Jeff Farrell | Tuesday 15 August 2017 13:01 BST | 197 comments

Mr Long said the police stood by and did nothing when white supremacists lashed out AP

A care worker who fought off white supremacist attackers in Charlottesville with an improvised flame thrower said he had set out for a peaceful protest against "Nazis who took over my town".

Corey Long had joined the hundreds of demonstrators in the Virginia city who turned out to heckle at radicals including Ku Klux Klan members who were marching in an ultra right-wing rally.

But the 23-year-old said the scene quickly turned violent when one of the thousands of extremists who had taken to the streets fired a gun next to his feet - while police nearby failed to react.

Contrary to his claims he actually initiated this incident and is reversing the time line to place the gun firing before the flame throwing

We use cookies to enhance your visit to our site and to bring you advertisements that might interest you. Read our Privacy and Cookie Policies to find out more.